What are some basic tools for building strong sentences, paragraphs, compositions, and research papers? You'll find them in this handbook—an easy-to-use “tool kit” for writers like you. Check out the helpful explanations, examples, and tips as you complete your writing assignments.

Writing Effective Sentences

A sentence is a group of words that expresses a complete thought. Every sentence has a subject and a predicate. An effective sentence communicates an idea clearly and reads smoothly. Try these strategies as you write and revise your sentences.

Varying Sentence Structure and Length

Even when the subject matter is interesting, many sentences in a row that sound alike or that have the same grammatical structure can be dull. You can make your writing lively and interesting by varying the structure, or pattern, of your sentences. You can give your writing impact by varying the length of your sentences.

Varying Sentence Openers A sentence doesn't always need to begin with the subject. Vary your sentence openers with these techniques.

- Start a sentence with a descriptive word.

Outside, the line to enter the theater stretched around the block.
Eager and expectant, the crowd waited for the concert to start.
Nervous, the sound crew rechecked the microphones.
Suddenly the lights in the auditorium dimmed.

- Start a sentence with a phrase.

Behind the curtain, the performer waited for his cue.
Looking into the crowd, the entertainer spotted his brother and smiled.
Dressed in a shiny suit, the rock star strutted onstage.

- Start a sentence with a clause.

While the crowd cheered, the band began to play.
As the lead vocalist sang his greatest hits, backup singers provided perfect harmony.
After the concert came to an end, the band filed offstage.

Varying Sentence Structure Use a variety of sentence patterns to make your writing more effective and more interesting to read.

- Use a simple sentence to state an idea directly. A simple sentence has only one main clause.

Marian Anderson was an African American opera singer.
She sang for a huge crowd at the Lincoln Memorial in 1939.

- Use a compound sentence to show two or more ideas of equal importance. A compound sentence has at least two main clauses.

Marian Anderson worked hard to develop her voice, but she was refused admission to a music school.
She was a pioneer in the performing arts, and she never let prejudice stand in her way.

- Use a complex sentence to show the relationship between two ideas. A complex sentence has at least one main clause and one subordinate clause.

Because Europeans would accept an African American opera singer, Marian Anderson performed in Europe for ten years.
In 1955 she became the first African American singer to perform at New York's Metropolitan Opera House, where she received a standing ovation.

Varying Sentence Length Many short sentences in a row make writing sound choppy. Add style, rhythm, and emphasis by varying the length of your sentences.

- Combine short sentences into longer ones.

Short The country-and-western song was sad. It told the story of a lonely man. The man missed his family.

Combined The sad country-and-western song told the story of a lonely man who missed his family.

- Alternate shorter sentences with longer ones.

The singer strummed his guitar. He sang about the troubles of a poor farmer, the power of a kind woman, and the pride of a patriotic soldier.

Using Parallelism

Parallelism is the use of a pair or a series of words, phrases, or sentences that have the same grammatical structure. Use parallelism to call attention to the items in the series and to create unity in writing.

Not Parallel A pulled muscle can feel stiff, sore, and cause pain.

Not Parallel The average person uses fourteen muscles to smile and forty-three muscles for frowning.

Not Parallel	Lifting weights builds strong muscles; do stretches to develop flexible muscles.

Not Parallel	Riding leisurely on a bike burns about three hundred calories per hour, but seven hundred calories are burned when you race on a bike for an hour.

Parallel	Three hundred calories are burned when you leisurely ride a bike for an hour, but seven hundred calories are burned when you race on a bike for an hour.

Remember to use parallel structure in charts, graphic organizers, or visual aids you include in a composition. Also use parallelism in the formal outline you create when writing a research report. Study this portion of an outline for a report on the Olympic Games.

Not Parallel

- A. History of Olympic Games
 - 1. In 776 B.C. first Olympic Games in Ancient Greece
 - 2. Greece—site of first modern Olympic Games in 1896
 - 3. 1900 was the first year women athletes competed in the Olympic Games

 - 1. First Olympic Games held in Ancient Greece in 776 B.C.
 - 2. First modern Olympic Games held in Greece in 1896
 - 3. First Olympic Games opened to women athletes in 1900

Drafting Tip

You can expand the power of parallelism beyond the reach of a single sentence or pair of sentences. Try using parallel structure throughout a paragraph or an entire composition by repeating similar words, phrases, or clauses for emphasis and rhythm.

Revising Wordy Sentences

Have you ever listened to a friend tell a two-minute story in ten minutes? You probably wanted to interrupt to say, “Get to the point!” The same is true with writing. You don’t want to wade through extra words to find the writer’s point. Be sure to show your readers the same consideration by getting to the point and making every word count. Here are some tips for revising wordy sentences.

• Cut needless words.

Wordy	I believe that all the high school students who go to Willow High School should really make every effort to volunteer in community service programs.
Concise	Students at Willow High School should volunteer in community service programs.

- Rewrite sentences beginning with empty phrases such as there are and it is important to note that.

Wordy	There are some students already working on a homework help line for younger kids.

- Change verbs in passive voice to active voice.

- Reduce clauses to phrases and phrases to words.

- Reduce the number of prepositional phrases.

Wordy	Four of the students in my class are teaching senior citizens who are unable to leave their homes how to use a computer.
Concise	Four classmates are teaching computer skills to homebound senior citizens.

Write five sentences about music, sports, or another topic that interests you. Use what you've learned about writing effective sentences.

- Use a variety of sentence types, lengths, and structures.
- Use parallelism.
- Be concise.

Writing Effective Paragraphs

A paragraph is a group of sentences that relate to one main idea. An effective paragraph develops a single idea and brings that idea into sharp focus. All the sentences flow smoothly from the beginning to the end of the paragraph.

Writing Unified Paragraphs

A paragraph has unity when the sentences belong together and center on a single main idea. Here is a helpful strategy for building a unified paragraph: State the main idea in a topic sentence and then add related details.

Writing Topic Sentences A topic sentence is a concise expression of your most important idea. It gives your readers the “big picture”—a general view of what you want them to know. A topic sentence can appear anywhere in the paragraph—at the beginning, middle, or end. A topic sentence at the beginning of an expository paragraph (a paragraph that conveys information) can communicate the key point right away. A topic sentence in the middle can unify the sentences that come before and after it. A topic sentence at the end can summarize the essential details of a paragraph, leaving your readers with a strong statement of your main idea.

Elaborating Topic Sentences Elaboration gives your readers a more detailed picture of the main idea stated in your topic sentence. Elaboration is a technique you can use to include details that develop, support, or explain the main idea. The following chart shows various kinds of elaboration you might try.

Revising Tip

To unify a paragraph, omit details that do not relate to the topic sentence.

Topic sentence: Zoo animals need protection during hurricanes.

Facts and statistics	In 1992 a devastating hurricane killed more than fifty birds at the Miami Metrozoo.
Anecdotes	One animal panicked during the storm; it ran around in circles and yelled.
Reasons	During a hurricane, an open-air habitat is a dangerous place for a zoo animal, so plans are now in place to move animals to safer enclosures in case of emergency.
Descriptions	Zookeepers herd the long-legged pink flamingos into the rest room, where they safely stand, quietly waiting for the storm to pass.
Examples	Mammals such as lions, tigers, bears, and monkeys are kept safe in concrete pens.
Quotations	One zoo director said, “The animals just have to ride out the storm like everyone else.”

Writing Coherent Paragraphs

A paragraph has coherence when all the sentences flow smoothly and logically from one to the next. All the sentences cohere, or “stick together,” sensibly. To make your writing coherent, choose a pattern of organization that is appropriate for your topic and use transitions to link ideas.

Organizing Paragraphs A few basic patterns of organization you can use to arrange the sentences of a paragraph are listed below. Choose the pattern that helps you meet your writing goal.

- Use chronological order, or time order, to tell a story or to explain a process.
- Use spatial order to order your description of places, people, and things. You might describe the details in the order you see them—for example, from top to bottom or from near to far.
- Use order of importance to show how you rank opinions, facts, or details—for example, from most to least important or the reverse.

Check It Out

For more about organizing your writing, see pages 69 and 127–129.

 Check It Out

For more about transitions, see pages 134 and 224.

Using Transitions Linking words and phrases, called transitions, act like bridges between sentences or between paragraphs. Transitions, such as the ones shown below, can make the organization of your paragraphs stronger by showing how ideas are logically related.

To show time order or sequence

after, before, finally, first, last year, later, meanwhile, next, now, second, sometimes, soon, yesterday

To show spatial relationships

above, ahead, around, beyond, down, here, inside, near, on top of, opposite, under, within

To show importance or degree above all, first, furthermore, in addition, least important, mainly, moreover, most important, second

Using Repetition Another transitional device is the repetition of key words or phrases. To make connections between sentences stronger, you can repeat identical or similar words. Note the repeated key words in these two closely linked sentences.

Rosa Parks's political actions strongly influenced the Civil Rights movement of the 1950s and 1960s. What is the legacy of her political influence today?

Paragraph Unity and Coherence Checklist

- ✓ Is the main idea stated clearly in a topic sentence?
- ✓ Do all the sentences relate to the main idea?
- ✓ Are all the sentences arranged in an order that makes sense?
- ✓ Do transitions link the sentences together and help show the order of your thoughts?

TRY IT OUT

Copy the following paragraph on your paper. Underline the topic sentence. Cross out the sentence that interrupts the unity and is unrelated to the topic sentence. Add a transition to make a clear connection between two of the sentences.

Here is how to use an incredible Japanese invention that supposedly translates the sounds your dog makes into words. First fasten this tiny gadget to your dog's collar. Encourage your dog to woof, bark, snarl, or howl. Finally press a button that interprets the dog sounds and plays them back as phrases or sentences. Dogs also use body language to communicate their feelings.

Writing Effective Compositions

A composition is a short paper made up of several paragraphs, with a clear introduction, body, and conclusion. An effective composition presents a clear, complete message about a specific topic. Ideas flow logically from one sentence to the next and from one paragraph to the next.

Making a Plan

The suggestions in the chart below can help you shape the information in each part of your composition to suit your writing purpose.

Introductory Paragraph

Your introduction should interest readers in your topic and capture their attention. You may

- give background
- use a quotation
- ask a question
- tell an anecdote, or brief story

Include a thesis statement, a sentence or two stating the main point or central idea you will develop in the composition.

Drafting Tip

You may need two paragraphs to introduce your topic. For example, the first can tell an anecdote; the second can include a thesis statement that expands the point of the anecdote.

Body Paragraphs

Elaborate on your thesis statement in the body paragraphs. You may

- offer proof
- give examples
- explain ideas

Stay focused and keep your body paragraphs on track. Remember to

- develop a single idea in each body paragraph
- arrange the paragraphs in a logical order
- use transitions to link one paragraph to the next

Concluding Paragraph

Your conclusion should bring your composition to a satisfying close. You may

- sum up main points
- tie the ending to the beginning by restating your main point or thesis in different words
- make a call to action if your goal is to persuade readers

Drafting Tip

Be sure that you do not introduce new or unrelated material in the conclusion.

Using the 6+1 Trait® Model

What are some basic terms you can use to discuss your writing with your teacher or classmates? What should you focus on as you revise and edit your compositions? Check out the following seven terms, or traits, that describe the qualities of strong writing. Learn the meaning of each trait and find out how using the traits can improve your writing.

Ideas The message or the theme and the details that develop it

Writing is clear when readers can grasp the meaning of your ideas right away. Check to see whether you're getting your message across.

- ✓ Does the title suggest the theme of the composition?
- ✓ Does the composition focus on a single narrow topic?
- ✓ Is the thesis—the main point or central idea—clearly stated?
- ✓ Do well-chosen details elaborate your main point?

Revising Tip

Use the cut-and-paste features of your word processing program to experiment with the structure—the arrangement of sentences or paragraphs. Choose the clearest, most logical order for your final draft.

Organization The arrangement of main ideas and supporting details

An effective plan of organization points your readers in the right direction and guides them easily through your composition from start to finish. Find a structure, or order, that best suits your topic and writing purpose. Check to see whether you've ordered your key ideas and details in a way that keeps your readers on track.

- ✓ Are the beginning, middle, and end clearly linked?
- ✓ Is the order of ideas easy to follow?
- ✓ Does the introduction capture your readers' attention?
- ✓ Do sentences and paragraphs flow from one to the next in a way that makes sense?
- ✓ Does the conclusion wrap up the composition?

Voice A writer's unique way of using tone and style

Your writing voice comes through when your readers sense that a real person is communicating with them. Readers will respond to the tone (or attitude) that you express toward a topic and to the style (the way that you use language and shape your sentences). Read your work aloud to see whether your writing voice comes through.

- ✓ Does your writing sound interesting?
- ✓ Does your writing reveal your attitude toward your topic?
- ✓ Does your writing sound like you—or does it sound like you're imitating someone else?

6+1 Trait® is a registered trademark of Northwest Regional Educational Laboratory, which does not endorse this product.

Word Choice The vocabulary a writer uses to convey meaning

Words work hard. They carry the weight of your meaning, so make sure you choose them carefully. Check to see whether the words you choose are doing their jobs well.

- ✓ Do you use lively verbs to show action?
- ✓ Do you use vivid words to create word pictures in your readers' minds?
- ✓ Do you use precise words to explain your ideas simply and clearly?

Sentence Fluency The smooth rhythm and flow of sentences that vary in length and style

The best writing is made up of sentences that flow smoothly from one sentence to the next. Writing that is graceful also sounds musical—rhythmic rather than choppy. Check for sentence fluency by reading your writing aloud.

- ✓ Do your sentences vary in length and structure?
- ✓ Do transition words and phrases show connections between ideas and sentences?
- ✓ Does parallelism help balance and unify related ideas?

Conventions Correct spelling, grammar, usage, and mechanics

A composition free of errors makes a good impression on your readers. Mistakes can be distracting, and they can blur your message. Try working with a partner to spot errors and correct them. Use this checklist to help you.

- ✓ Are all words spelled correctly?
- ✓ Are all proper nouns—as well as the first word of every sentence—capitalized?
- ✓ Is your composition free of sentence fragments?
- ✓ Is your composition free of run-on sentences?
- ✓ Are punctuation marks—such as apostrophes, commas, and end marks—inserted in the right places?

Presentation The way words and design elements look on a page

Appearance matters, so make your compositions inviting to read. Handwritten papers should be neat and legible. If you're using a word processor, double-space the lines of text and choose a readable font. Other design elements—such as boldfaced headings, bulleted lists, pictures, and charts—can help you present information effectively as well as make your papers look good.

Revising Tip

Listen carefully to the way your sentences sound when someone else reads them aloud. If you don't like what you hear, revise for sentence fluency. You might try adding variety to your sentence openers or combining sentences to make them less choppy.

Many people who like to drink hot tea follow three easy steps: Pour boiling water into a cup, dip in a tea bag for a few minutes, and then sip the tea. In Japanese culture, though, the process of enjoying tea is both an art form and a spiritual experience. No other world culture drinks tea in such a unique way. The Japanese tea ceremony consists of carefully paced actions performed with grace and precision. I often remember vivid moments from a ceremony I once attended.

The beginning of the tea ceremony created an atmosphere of peace, harmony, and calmness. The host bowed and welcomed me and three other guests. We all treated one another with deep respect based on the idea of ichigo-ichie, which means “one cup, one moment.” The time people spend together at the Japanese tea ceremony is considered precious.

After these thoughtful greetings, the host led us to the tearoom, located near a garden. We knelt on mats as we waited for something to eat. The host served us a three-course meal that included rice and soup, seafood, and sweets. When we finished, we walked leisurely around the garden while the host prepared the tearoom for the next phase of the tea ceremony. He decorated the room with flowers and arranged beautiful objects for making tea. Many of these utensils are considered works of art—for example, the bamboo tea scoop and tea whisk, the ceramic tea bowl, and the iron tea kettle.

A gong clanged seven times, signaling that we should return to the tearoom. The host ladled steaming hot water into the tea bowl and then put in a scoop of fragrant tea. Each of us, one by one, raised the tea bowl to admire its beauty. Next we each sipped some tea, wiped the rim, and then passed the bowl to the next guest. The host then served us a second tea, which was thinner than the first. This final serving of tea represented a moment of transition. We were preparing to leave the spiritual world of the tea ceremony and return to the physical world of our daily lives.

The ending of the tea ceremony mirrored the displays of respect that we had exchanged in the beginning. The other guests and I complimented the host on the art of the ceremony; the host, in turn, seemed quietly delighted. We all silently shared the beauty of this rare artistic and spiritual experience.

Writing Effective Research Papers

A research paper reports facts and ideas gathered from various sources about a specific topic. An effective research paper blends information from reliable sources with the writer's original thoughts and ideas. The final draft follows a standard format for presenting information and citing sources.

Exploring a Variety of Sources

Once you've narrowed the topic of your research paper, you'll need to hunt for the best information. You might start by reading an encyclopedia article on your topic to learn some basic information. Then widen your search to include both primary and secondary sources.

- Primary sources are records of events by the people who witnessed them. Examples include diaries, letters, speeches, and historical documents (such as the Declaration of Independence). Primary sources also include photographs, posters, interviews, and radio and TV news broadcasts that include eyewitness interviews.
- Secondary sources contain information that is often based on primary sources. The creators of secondary sources often conduct original research and then report their findings, shaping the information they've gathered in their own way. Examples include encyclopedias, textbooks, biographies, magazine articles, Web site articles, and educational films.

When you find a secondary source that you can use for your report, check to see whether the author has given credit to his or her sources of information in footnotes, endnotes, or a bibliography. Tracking down such sources may lead you to more information you can use for your report.

If you're exploring your topic on the Internet, look for Web sites that are sponsored by government institutions, famous museums, and reliable organizations. If you find a helpful site, check to see whether it contains links to other Web sites you can use.

Evaluating Sources

As you conduct your research, do a little detective work and investigate the sources you find. Begin by asking some key questions to help you decide whether you've tracked down reliable resources that are suitable for your purpose. Some important questions to ask about your sources are listed in the box on the next page.

Research Tip

Look for footnotes at the bottom of a page. Look for endnotes at the end of a chapter or a book. Look for a bibliography at the end of a book.

Ask Questions About Your Sources

✓ Is the information useful?

Look for sources that are closely related to your research topic. Dig deep; you may find a single chapter that pertains to your topic within a longer work.

✓ Is the information easy to understand?

Look for sources that are written at a reading level that's right for you.

✓ Is the information up to date?

Look for sources that were recently published if you need the most-current facts and figures.

✓ Is the information trustworthy and accurate?

Check to see whether the authors document their sources of facts and support their opinions with reasons and evidence. Also check out the background of the authors. They should be qualified experts on the topic that you're researching.

✓ Is the information balanced and fair?

Read with a critical eye. Does the source try to persuade readers with a one-sided presentation of information? Or is the source balanced, approaching a topic from various perspectives? Be on the lookout for propaganda and for sources that reflect an author's bias, or prejudice. Make sure that you learn about a topic from more than one angle by reviewing several sources of information.

Giving Credit Where Credit Is Due

When you write a research paper, you support your own ideas with information that you've gleaned from your primary and secondary sources. But presenting someone else's ideas as if they were your own is plagiarism, a form of cheating. You can avoid plagiarism by citing, or identifying, the sources of your information within the text of your paper. The following chart tells what kinds of information you do and don't need to cite in the body of your paper.

DO credit the source of . . .

- direct quotations
- summaries and paraphrases, or restatements, of someone else's viewpoints, original ideas, or conclusions
- photos, art, charts, and other visuals
- little-known facts or statistics

DON'T credit the source of . . .

- information found in many sources—dates, facts, and ideas considered common knowledge
- your own unique ideas

Citing Sources Within Your Paper The most common method of crediting sources is with parenthetical documentation within the text. Generally a reference to the source and page number is included in parentheses at the end of each quotation, paraphrase, or summary of information borrowed from a source. An in-text citation points readers to a corresponding entry in your works-cited list—a list of all your sources, complete with publication information, that will appear as the final page of your paper. The Modern Language Association (MLA) recommends the following guidelines for crediting sources in text. You may wish to refer to the MLA Handbook for Writers of Research Papers by Joseph Gibaldi for more information and examples.

- Put in parentheses the author's last name and the page number where you found the information.

As Time magazine once noted, “Gorbachev seemed eager to stop talking about change and to begin making it happen” (Moody 41).

- If the author's name is mentioned in the sentence, put only the page number in parentheses.

Time magazine journalist John Moody once noted, “Gorbachev seemed eager to stop talking about change and to begin making it happen” (41).

- If no author is listed, put the title or a shortened version of the title in parentheses. Include a page number if you have one.

Mikhail Gorbachev won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1990 “for his leading role in the peace process which characterizes important parts of the international community” (Nobel).

Preparing the Final Draft

Ask your teacher how he or she wants you to format the final draft of your paper. Most English teachers will ask you to follow the MLA guidelines listed below.

- Create a heading in the upper left-hand corner of the first page with your name, your teacher's name, and the date on separate lines.
- Center the title on the line below the heading.
- Number the pages one-half inch from the top in the right-hand corner. After page one, put your last name before the page number.
- Set one-inch margins on all sides of every page; double-space the lines of text.
- Include an alphabetized, double-spaced works-cited list as the last page of your final draft. All sources noted in parenthetical citations in the paper must be listed.

On the next three pages, you'll find sample style sheets that can help you prepare your list of sources—the final page of the research paper. Use the one your teacher prefers.
